The Future of Data Protection: Post GDPR Deadline

09:00	Registration, Exhibition and Networking
09:45	Welcome and Introduction from Chair Maureen Falconer , Regional Manager for Scotland, Information Commissioner's Office
Session 1	GDPR and the Data Protection Act - Lessons Learned It has been over a year since the seismic shift in privacy and information law brought about by the introduction of the GDPR and DPA 18. Now that the dust has settled, what can we learn about their impact on Scotland's public sector? What have been the key challenges and opportunities for public sector organisations when it comes to complying with the new regulatory environment?
09:50	18 Months On - Some General Data Protection Reflections With almost eighteen months having passed since the implementation of the GDPR, Ken Macdonald will look back at some of the experiences of the ICO in Scotland as data controllers adapted to the new regime and consider what lessons have been learned over that period. Dr Ken Macdonald , Head of ICO Regions, Information Commissioner's Office
10:10	Turning Data Compliance from a Data Headache into an Information Opportunity Achieving regulatory compliance can be tricky without a concrete plan. The stakes are high for organisations struggling with two competing forces: the demand for uncompromising information access and protection and the exponential increase in data growth and sprawl. The expectation of today's IT organisation is triple 9's in performance and resiliency while preventing information crisis or theft. Come and learn how to you avoid a crisis when you don't understand the nature of the data you're protecting? Jasmit Sagoo , CTO and Senior Director, UKI, Veritas

10:30	Case Study: Data Protection and The Data Lab Jude McCorry , Head of Business Development, The Data Lab
